ROCK HARD: Drew Arellano at The Thing

Meet your quarter-life superheroes

From pages C-1

got to college people started complimenting her on the natural tan. A self-confessed techie, she blogs, with young "morenas" more than proud to be their poster girl and a boost to their self-esteem. "Type lo talaga Pinoy, Morena" she attests, nodding her head repeatedly. With a touch of evil, I interrogate her about boyfriend and director Lino Cayetano's light skin and auburn hair and she completely charmingly cracks up at the irony. Still shaking her head, she walks away to strike her best pose.

Maribel Rodriguez jumps up beside me, like a tiny dynamo. She doesn't stop to catch a breath, narrating how she just bet against Chase Tilio on how long he was in college. Pretty gutsy considering Chase should know that little factoid better. She breaks out into the most throaty, cascading laugh I have heard since Andie MacDowell's campy turn in Hudson Hawk.

You know there's just no stopping this gal. From the day manager Jet Villa introduced her to the MTV people, she quickly decided to drop college at DLSU and was immediately whisked off to Singapore to train for "Rouge." She credits her unmarked self-confidence to the wonderful and supportive grandparents who raised her and her younger sister. "I'm really glad my grandparents raised us. My lolo is the best. I don't think anyone is kinder. My grandma is the most supportive person. They taught me to believe in myself regardless of other people." When criticized, Maribel just becomes more driven. Her father, living in the US, was completely against her becoming an actress. Her father was so protective that she needed to call him long distance to ask permission just to go mailing with friends. Maribel has her own mind. She is determined to be an actress and sets her sights on a "teleserye" when she's ready. Whatever free time she has between "Ok Fine" with Aga Muhlach, MTV gigs and hosting, she watches movies and TV, studying her craft. Given to extremes, Maribel laughs incessantly but she also cries easily. Tears flowed while she watched "The Lion King" and the season-ender of the "OC." From her toothy laugh to deep frown, we can't wait to see Maribel become a real drama queen.

Drew Arellano was more business than show biz when casting directors took notice tapping him for consecutive Sunilk and GSM Blue commercials. Back then he was an account manager with J. Romero and Associates. He also ran his own business with a friend as the local distributors of Cuetec billiard sticks at Toby's—a business that drives until today even with Drew's full schedule. His day starts at 4 a.m. with GMA 7's "Umag Hirit" every weekday and hosting jobs. He re-
